Western Cider

The Story

Located on the banks of the Clark Fork River in Missoula, Montana.

The dream was seeded in 2012 when orchardist Michael Billingsley planted 2,500 cider apple trees in Montana's Bitterroot Valley - just south of Missoula. Today, with nearly 5,000 trees and over 50 varieties of apples planted. Western Cider uses those apples, as well as apples from Northwest orchards, to produce easy going and traditional ciders. As cider makers, Western Cider aspires to create an institution of great cider, good times and a life worth living in this far-flung region of the American West.

Exclusive Bottlings for The Ranch at Rock Creek

In 2023, The Ranch at Rock Creek requested Western Cider to bottle us a yearly cider that spoke to the best the harvest had to offer. The goal is to have a library of Montana ciders that are as distinctive as they are delicious.

Uka Sake

The Story

The rice used to make Uka sake is grown at Koda Farms in California's San Joaquin Valley. In 1928, Keisaburo Koda, an immigrant from Ogawa, Fukushima, Japan, founded the farm. At this same location, Keisaburo's third generation descendants endeavor to continue the 90+ year history of growing high quality rice. During the tenure of the second generation, Koda Farms rice breeder created the uniquely shaped medium grain Japonica rice variety, KR55, packaged under the Koda Farms brand, Kokuho Rose, whose literal translation is 'country's treasure.' During its 60+ year life, Kokuho Rose has garnered a reputation for excellence among rice connoisseurs for its pleasing appearance, tantalizing aroma, and slightly sweet floral flavor. In 2019, experiments began to craft Koda Farms organic rice into sake. Unexpectedly, the results from brewing Kokuho Rose, a non-traditional variety for brewing sake, yielded impressive outcomes, and culminated with the introduction of Uka Black Label, Uka Dry, and Uka Sparkling Sake.
